William L. May

William L. May, a former resident of Rainsburg, now of Flintstone, Md., and well-known lumberman, died at 8:35 o'clock Friday morning, May 2, at the home of his parents in Cumberland. He had been in ill health for some time following an operation performed last November, his condition was not thought serious until about a week prior to his death. At time of death he was aged fifty years and eighteen days. Deceased was a son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry May, of Cumberland and was born on April 14, 1874.

Some years ago he was united in marriage with Mary Shipley, who survives. Besides his widow, he is survived by two daughters and five sons: Mrs. William Cessna, of Rainsburg; Mrs. Glenn Beagle of Westminster, Md.; Coy D., of Bedford; Doyle H., of Rainsburg; and Armour, Erie, and Arlo, all at home. He is also survived by two sisters and four brothers: Mrs. Boyd Tate, of Akron, Ohio; Mrs. Charles Russell of Cumberland, Md.; Ernest of New Port News, Va.; Richard of Everett; Joshua, of Oklahoma City, Okla., and C. G. May of Bedford; also four grand-children survive.

CHAUTAUQUA PROGRAM READY FOR JUNE

Opening June 2 at Canonsburg, Pa., the Redpath chautauqua circuit, of which this city as a part, will tour principal towns in Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The Bedford program will be held June 8, 10, 11, 12 and 13. No program will be given on Monday.

Outstanding features of the 1924 program are the comedy-drama, "Give and Take," with a New York cast; the Royal Welsh Quartet; Hon. W. L. Harding, former governor of Iowa; Joseph Baldi, accordionist; the College Singing Girls; J. Franklin Caveny, clay modeller and cartoonist; Herbert Leon Cope, humorist; the Farnum Musical Trio; Jean MacDonald, entertainer; Brush and Company, magicians; Ben A. Arneson with a lecture on "Purified Politics" and Herriek and Jensen in "Something Different."

It is estimated that more than 10,000 chautauquas will be held in the United States this season. A large percentage of these are operated by the Redpath management which furnishes attractions for the Bedford assembly. The first programs were held in Florida in early March, when the Redpath tents were pitched along the gulf coast. Reports from that territory are to the effect that attendance and interest this season are much greater than in any previous year.

FRIDAY EVENING'S ENTERTAINMENT

There was no disappointment came to those who attended the entertainment in Assembly Hall on Friday evening, May 2nd., given under the direction of Mrs. J. V. Royer for benefit of the Parent-Teachers High School Building Fund.

From start to finish the program numbers were brimful of fun, special mirth being provoked by the two playlets entitled "Paying the Piper" and "Mamma's Boy" in which Miss Mary Royer showed surprising talent in impersonation, as did also Miss Wallace and John Royer in the Balcony Scene from "Romeo and Juliet" (Shakespeare.)

Space will not permit special mention of each program number which those who heard will not soon forget.

The Musical and Dramatic Readings by Mrs. Royer were of superior merit, each proving her ability as an artist in the truest sense.

Those assisting aside from Mrs. Royer's Class in Elocution were: Miss Elizabeth Thompson and Mr. Doty as soloists, Miss Emery Bell, violinist, Miss Anna Cessna, Mrs. Frank Lessig and Mrs. J. T. Bell, accompanists.

The patriotic pantomime closing the entertainment was the production of Mrs. Royer and was a scene of especial beauty.

The evening's gross receipts were $151.50 the P. T. A. High School Building Fund realizing $137.50 of the amount.

Program numbers were interspersed by orchestra numbers.

HARVEST MOON

By RIVIERA HERSEY

(© 1924, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

EUNICE walked down the path that led to her front gate, her usually merry face marred by a frown, and her little heels digging fiercely into the gravel on the walk. Climbing into the little brown car that stood in the road, she slammed the door after her with a bang. Then, with one more angry glance at the letter, she crushed it into her pocket, threw out the clutch, and letting it in again with a force that somewhat matched her feelings, sent the little roadster forward with a jerk.

She stopped at the grade crossing, and taking out the letter while waiting, read it through once more. As she turned the page, unconsciously a tender light came into her eyes; "and I know you will be glad to hear that while I was in the neighborhood I went over to the sanitarium to see Jim Harold. Well, all I can say is that the doctors and the baths and treatments have all done their best for him.

"You remember, he said he would try the treatments for six months, whether for weal or for woe, but a terrible wound such as Jim received, added to the hardship of life in the trenches for such a very long time, can do an awful lot of harm, and when you remember that a fellow hasn't been able to walk for nearly eight months—why, he needs a lot of curing."

Eunice's face was very thoughtful. The sound of her horn brought Grace and Aunt Jane out to meet her, and the three worked busily putting in place all the ears of corn, sunnys, place cards and other decorations for the evening. Eunice saved her disappointing news for the very end.

"I shall have to come back alone," she announced as she climbed into the little roadster once more; "Joe sent word this morning that he couldn't possibly get here—at least, not till very late. It's a shame," as she noted the way Grace Harold's face fell.

"Yes, it is too bad," agreed Grace, trying to speak nonchalantly, "and not to have Jim here, either. Poor fellow."

"I've a wonderful game to play," whispered Grace in excitement, as Eunice slipped out of her wraps that evening. "It's one that Jim and I used to play when we were youngsters. It's a secret—even from you," and she rushed away to welcome her guests who were just arriving.

A merry, light-hearted group of young folks they were and how they did enjoy themselves. Aunt Jane felt herself growing young once more, and when they had come to the inevitable lull, and even the gayest seemed to lag, she stepped into the breach at once.

"Outdoors, all of you," she commanded, laughingly. "Now, draw lots."

"Who drew the longest strip?" asked Aunt Jane, breaking into the silence.

Eunice held out the paper.

Then Aunt Jane explained:

"Go down into the orchard until you are out of sight of the house. Hold this mirror in your hand, and letting the moonlight fall over your left shoulder, repeat this rhyme five times. Then look in the glass and the face of the man you are to marry will look out at you."

So, laughing, Eunice slipped off. Shutting her eyes she recited rapidly:

Under the Harvest Moon here I stand
Magic mirror in my hand
Moonbeams so full in a sky so clear,
Pray let me see in the mirror here
The face of the man who will some day be
The dearest in all the world to me.

So intent was she in getting through with this Peter Piper performance that she did not hear the click of the orchard gate nor the soft swish of footsteps over the pine needles, and with a little scream Eunice dropped the mirror and covered her eyes as a deep familiar voice behind her repeated softly:

Under the Harvest sky, lo, I stand,
Brought hither, fair lady, at thy command,
For the moon that is shining away up there
Never shone on a face more wondrous fair.
And my life will never quite happy be
Till I see in all this world to me
And as if to convince her that he was more than thin air two hands turned Eunice around to confront the impromptu poet.

"Oh Jim," she gasped, "it is went, it is went, I am so glad!"

"Yes," said the man, his voice trembling with emotion, "it is went and now I can tell you what I have wanted to tell you for ages, but dared not until I knew I should be well again. Eunice, dear, the harvest moon is shining—won't you give me the welcome home I have been longing for?"

And with a half sob the girl went into his outstretched arms.

Back at the house Joe, making his late appearance, went searching for the guests.

"Where's Eunice?" he asked, as he missed her.

"Why, she went down into the orchard to keep an engagement with a gentleman," answered one of the boys, "and, by Joe, she didn't go for nothing," he added excitedly, as two figures came slowly up the path.

EVERYDAY GOOD THINGS

Fresh and canned fruits are invaluable as aids in keeping the system in good condition.

Philippine Salad.—Take one-half cupful of diced celery, two pimentoes chopped fine, one cupful of walnuts, one-half of a green pepper chopped. Mix the ingredients well, add mayonnaise and serve on shredded lettuce nests. This amount will serve six.

Cream Pie.—Take two cupfuls of top milk, two eggs, separating the yolks and whites, beating well. Mix the yolks with three-fourths of a cupful of brown sugar and one-half cupful of flour. When well-blended add the milk, scalded, a teaspoonful of vanilla and a tablespoonful of butter after the mixture is cooked and smooth. Cool and fill a baked crust. Cover with a meringue made from the two egg whites and two tablespoonfuls of sugar. Bake until the meringue is brown.

Apple Crisp.—Butter a fireproof dish and fill with sliced apples, using eight; add one teaspoonful of cinnamon and one-half cupful of water. Work together one cupful of sugar and three-fourths of a cupful of flour and seven tablespoonfuls of fat until crumbly. Spread over the apple mixture and bake uncovered. Serve with whipped cream or maple syrup.

Waldorf Ham.—Make a rich, highly seasoned white sauce, using cream, one cupful, butter and flour each two tablespoonfuls; when cooked smooth add minced ham. Heap this in the center of a hot platter. Butter small custard cups and sprinkle the lower half thick with minced parsley. Break an egg in each and bake until the eggs are set. Turn out around the ham and sauce and dot the top of each with butter.

Carrot, Apple and Onion Salad.—Chop a small apple, grind through the meat grinder one small carrot, add a little scraped onion and a small amount of chopped celery. Heap on lettuce, add a good highly-seasoned dressing and serve well-chilled.

America's Marvels

NATURAL AND OTHERWISE

THE CRADLE OF LIBERTY

Independence hall oft referred to as "The Cradle of Liberty," in historic Chestnut street, Philadelphia, where "Uncle Sam" was born more than 146 years ago stands and looks very much as it did when, on July 4, 1776, the liberty bell rang out to the world from its place in the tower the news that the colonies in America had agreed to withdraw from the rule of England.

The plans for this venerable brick building, which is 100 feet long and 44 feet wide, were laid in 1729. Except for the wings and the tower, the structure was completed a few years later as a home for the Continental congress.

Possessed of a simple dignity and a quiet charm, Independence hall is a substantial and imposing relic of Colonial architecture—perhaps the most historic of all American buildings. To and through it come and go annually hundreds of thousands of citizens, representing every state in the Union and many lands beyond the seas.

This building has been the center of many a stirring and history-making scene. In it met that Continental congress which debated, then shaped, subsequently adopted, and finally signed the Declaration of Independence. From its steps this precious document was read to the people. In it George Washington was commissioned commander in chief of the Continental armies. It was here that the first American flag was raised on his birthday in 1776. It was to this building that his body was carried to lie in state and here it was that congress convened, following the close of the Revolutionary war during the summer of 1787, to agree to sign a constitution for the newly-created United States.

The room in which, one by one, the authorized representatives of the 13 colonies advanced in a tense atmosphere and affixed their signatures in ratification of the Declaration of Independence is indeed dignified. The walls of the building are graced with portraits of the signers and a painting of that dramatic moment when the signing was in progress.

Liberty bell, the most famous of all bells in America, was removed from the tower many, many years ago, and now reposes within a glass cabinet on the main floor, almost directly beneath the location from which it rang out its message of freedom on July 4, 1776.

Half-Way House of the Atlantic

Fruit Vendor of the Azores.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

The Azores, historic half-way house of the Atlantic, come into their own as a traffic station in the winter when the Europe-bound stream of tourists runs to the Mediterranean countries rather than to northern Europe. Just as Columbus, plying between a port near the Strait of Gibraltar and America, passed among the Azores, so modern steamer lanes touch the islands; and the tourists refresh themselves by hasty visits to its picturesque towns and countryside as the really ocean-weary world explorers cheered and revived their spirits by setting foot once more on terra firma.

These quaint bits of land almost in mid-Atlantic are well worth more than the hasty, passing visit that most tourists give them. The central cluster of the group, formed by the islands of Fayal, Pico, Sao Jorge, Graciosa and Terceira, lies more than 840 miles directly west of Lisbon. About 150 miles northwest of this centrally located group are Flores and Corvo, and approximately the same distance to the southeast Santa Maria, and the largest and most important of all, St. Michaels (Sao Miguel).

The Azores are not, as is generally supposed, a colonial possession, but form an integral part of Portugal. For political and administrative purposes they are divided into three districts, each sending its representatives to the congress at Lisbon.

Owing to their location, the Azores have played a very important part in the history of sea navigation, and even in aerial navigation, for they were the half-way house in the epochal transatlantic flight by American naval officers in the seaplane NC-4.

The keen interest that the Azoreans manifested in the first transatlantic flight had a deeper cause than mere curiosity. They remember that the first sailing vessel that crossed the Atlantic, over four hundred years ago landed at one of their islands. They were the first to receive from Columbus the news of the discovery of a new world, and they hailed with delight the opportunity to welcome to their shores the first man to win the title of "Columbus of the Air."

Discovered by Cabral.

The discovery of Madeira, the Canaries and the Azores islands was a direct result of the persistent efforts of Prince Henry the navigator, of Portugal, to double Cape Bojador and to discover a new route to India. It was during the glorious period of Portuguese explorations that Goncalo Velho Cabral discovered Santa Maria, the most southerly of the Azores, in 1482. In the course of succeeding years, covering a period of more than a decade, the other islands were discovered.

From that time on down to modern days the Azores, or Western Islands, became the scene of many an historic event.

Violent earthquakes have disturbed the Azores during the centuries since their discovery down to the eighteenth. The annals of the islands vie with those of Italy in graphic accounts of the ever-interesting and terrible volcanic phenomena. Cities were buried, mountains disappeared and sent their ashes to unbelievable distances; islands hundreds of feet high suddenly appeared and as suddenly disappeared, and flames of fire illuminated whole islands and their intervening waters.

There is perhaps no country in the world that has such a heavy tide of emigration, in proportion to the number of its inhabitants, as the Western islands. Some of the emigrants go to Brazil, but by far the majority to the United States. During the year before the World war, 6,000 Azoreans emigrated to the United States, and it is estimated that there are 35,000 Azoreans in California and over 60,000 in New Bedford, Mass., Providence, R. I., and other parts of New England, making a total of almost 100,000. The population of all the Azores is scarcely 300,000. Many of the emigrants return home and almost all of the inhabitants of some of the islands have been in the United States.

The island of St. Michaels does not overwhelm you with the grandeur of a Rocky mountain scene. It captures you subtly. Little by little impressions pile up in your memory until your fancy lingers in the beautiful gardens, whose walls are covered with wisteria and climbing roses, in the magnificent parks, and among the extensive hedges of hydrangea that bloom along the country roads.

By way of contrast, St. Michaels will fret and frown amid fearful, stormy seas. But you are compensated when, on a sunny day, you stand on the summit of one of the many peaks and behold the tranquil scene below you. Then you will see the island studded with towns and villages, the verdant hills laid out in checkered fields and cultivated to the very tops, picturesque dome-like windmills turning their long wings, and the harbor and surrounding ocean dotted with sails that glisten in the bright sunshine.

Ponta Delgada, the largest city in the Azores, has 17,600 inhabitants. Fortunately, it has preserved some of its old features, the inheritance of the past centuries—just enough to breathe an atmosphere of quaintness and to make the place so delightfully attractive that the jumble of high, massive chimneys, the tall walls, and the small balconies that overhang the streets become a part of one's life.

Modern buildings there are, such as the imposing hospital, the quarantine station, the governor's palace, and many private residences. But it is not these one cares to talk about in a place that can boast interesting relics of the past.

Fine Botanical Gardens.

Ponta Delgada still has a number of houses that have been handed down through generations in accordance with the law of the morgados. The morgado was the oldest son, who inherited the estate of his father and upon whom devolved the duty of providing for the other members of the family. The architecture of these houses is the same as that used in olden times by the morgados of northern Portugal. Here they are built of massive lava rock. Many of the gardens have high stone towers that command a view of the sea and surrounding country.

Ponta Delgada has wonderful botanical gardens. They have been pronounced by some as ranking next to those in Portugal, and by others as inferior only to the famous gardens of Brazil. That of Jose do Canto was begun in 1948. Senor Canto was connected with all the different nurseries in the world, and it was his ambition to gather specimens of all the trees and plants that could be obtained. The result is a marvelous collection.

The gardens contain tree ferns originally from Australia, many species of palms (such as the date, sago, and fan), Australian myrtle, great varieties of aloes, magnificent roses and camelias, India-rubber trees, banyan trees, acacias, magnolias, dracaenas, brilliant red-flame trees, screw-pines, and fine specimens of the cedar of Lebanon.

Formerly, oranges were the principal article of export, and in 1872, 300,000 boxes were shipped abroad, representing a value of about $500,000. From that time on the orange industry declined, as a result of tree blight.

St. Michaels is a little world in itself, and the Azoreans have a little of everything. They raise their own wine and tea and have their own mineral water and thermal baths; they have their own tobacco and manufacture their own cigars; they cultivate large quantities of sugar-beet and manufacture their own sugar. The rich volcanic earth and humid, but peaceful, climate lend themselves to the cultivation of great varieties of agricultural products, including vegetables and fruits of the temperate and tropical zones. Twenty-one thousand head of cattle graze in the hills and help to form one of the principal industries of the islands, the manufacture of cheese. The sea furnishes a livelihood for a large number of its inhabitants, and thousands of lobsters are exported to the continent.

TRAFFIC

Knowledge, comfort, wealth, even safety, are dependent on the highways over which men go. Every increase in a road's usability is a fourfold benefit.

Today permanent highways have proved that they are both most usable and also ultimately cheapest. And the one material that makes this possible is Portland Cement, which, despite wide general demand, remains the cheapest of all manufactured products.

Atlas, through developing the rotary kiln, did more than anyone else to make Portland Cement actually cheaper today than thirty years ago. And in selecting the building material dealer as the only link between Atlas and user, assured distribution economy.

Henry Cabot Lodge rose up to state that the President should not be criticised. Then the wall caved in on the Hennery and the roof collapsed. He was the leader of the vicious attacks on Woodrow Wilson.

It is rubbing it in when a Republican newspaper gives a headline:—"Republican Congressional Leaders Summoned to the White House for a Conference with the President and C. Bascom Slemph."

Secretary Mellon is against the bonus because he is afraid HIS taxes will be raised and he won't have enough money to invest in tax exempt securities of which he so loudly "hollers" and yet so profoundly and fondly cherishes.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE ITEMS

Pottsville.—City council has authorized advertising for bids for the paving of all the principal streets of this city which are macadamized. The work will involve the largest sum this city ever has expended in the letting of a single contract. Asphalt and brick will be the material used. Several Philadelphia contractors have indicated they will bid.

Port Allegheny.—The special election approved a bond issue of $80,000 to build a new high school to take the place of the one recently burned.

Lancaster.—Dr. Park P. Breneman, one of this city's oldest and best-known physicians, fell dead while administering to a patient in his private office. Doctor Breneman was an authority on the use of the X-ray and a pioneer in the use of the machine in this section of Pennsylvania.

Pottstown.—Fire supposed to have been caused by an explosion of oil in a heating device of his own invention destroyed the home and garage of Warren Koch. He was severely burned in fighting the flames.

Pittsburgh.—Mrs. Claire Dell Signor, of Renton, Pa., is the first woman of Allegheny county to be sent to jail for non-payment of taxes. She was placed in prison on a commitment signed by Tax Collector G. R. Smith, of Plum township, who charged that she refused to pay taxes amounting to $5.25. After spending the night and half of a day in jail, Mrs. Signor decided to pay the taxes and was released.

Chambersburg.—Samuel Shockey, aged 22, of Beartown, a mountain village near here, confessed, the police said, that he shot and killed his brother, Jacob, aged 26, in a gun fight on a lonely mountain trail. He then covered the body with leaves and fled in company with a girl companion of the slain man. He and the girl, whose name is said to be Iva Wills, aged 20, were captured by state police, after a ten-hour search, and brought to the Franklin county jail here.

Coatesville.—Marion Nostrand, 15, New London, Conn., sought by police for several weeks, was found here at the home of George and Lewis Barton, circus performers, where she was leading tight-rope walking. The girl was removed to a hospital suffering complete nervous exhaustion.

Sunbury.—Eggs appear to be a glut on the market here, selling as low as twenty and twenty-four cents a dozen. In the country districts, it is claimed, that they have been bought as low as eighteen cents per dozen.

Uniontown.—Two women have been enrolled as members of the Mount Braddock local of the Fayette County Fish and Game Protective Association. This is the first instance of where women have been admitted to membership in the organization.

Farrel.—Jacob Polich was bound over to court by Justice Joseph Frank on a charge of transporting liquor. He had two quarts of white mule in his possession, is the charge, and furnished bail.

Lancaster.—Dr. Park P. Breneman, one of the city's oldest and best-known physicians, fell dead while administering to a patient in his office. Dr. Breneman was an authority on the use of X-ray and a pioneer in the use of the machine in this section of Pennsylvania.

Bellefonte.—Because of the meager allowance given for maintenance to the Bellefonte Hospital by the last legislature, the board of managers faces the proposition of appealing to the public for support of the institution. They will undertake a drive for the sum of $100,000, with which to construct a small addition to the present buildings, make much-needed improvements, pay off the indebtedness and have sufficient to tide the hospital over until the next meeting of the legislature.

Bloomsburg.—The contract for the erection of a new church for St. Matthew's Lutheran congregation was awarded to H. A. Moore & Co., of Milton, for $124,301. F. P. Edwards, of Bloomsburg, won the electrical contract and W. F. Hartman, of Bloomsburg, the plumbing and heating. The cost will be about $128,000.

York.—A coroner's jury placed the blame for the death of Solomon Jacobs on liquor furnished him by Hanover bootleggers. Jacobs died within half an hour after he drank some liquor, and physicians who conducted a post-mortem examination testified death was caused by alcoholism.

Lancaster.—Private Ernest Koerner, a member of troop E, state police, has resigned to become chief of the police department at Dallastown, in York county.

Pottsville.—Pastors of the Philadelphia conference of the Methodist church in this section closed the conference year, and all united in stating that never before had the church had such a year of prosperity in the coal region. The contributions were the largest in the history of the church, and the number of new members received also broke all records.

Parkside.—School directors of Sellersville and Parkside, in joint session here approved a proposal for the joint erection of a consolidated high school to serve both towns and the adjoining townships.

Hazleton.—The East End Fire company was disturbed at a banquet in honor of its thirtieth anniversary by a fire alarm and the firemen "rolled out," leaving the music unheeded, the guests to entertain themselves and the viands untasted. They returned later with their best clothes soaked with water and chemicals. The program was then resumed. The fire was at the Joseph Arnold garage, where $7000 worth of Easter goods belonging to John Schumacher, a wholesale confectioner, was destroyed with $4000 damage to the building.

Lewistown.—James F. Mabey, aged 82 years, ended his life by shooting himself through the head with a revolver in his room in the presence of his daughter, Mrs. F. M. Chestnut.

Montrose.—The founding of Montrose 100 years ago will be celebrated in July, this year, with an historical pageant and a home-coming week during the July 2-6 period. The committee are planning a big celebration.

Lansford.—Rev. Francis J. Dutko, a native of Allentown and for the last year assistant rector of St. Michael's Slavish Catholic church here, has been transferred to Coatesville, to become the rector of St. Joseph's Slavish church at that place.

Allentown.—Several New York capitalists who have large interests in this city have informed Mayor Gross that they have completed plans for the erection of a $1,000,000 hotel in Allentown, and that construction will be begun as soon as the question of the site is settled.

Hazleton.—The officers of the Luzerne County Sunday School Association have invited Governor Gifford Pinchot to address the annual convention here at Trinity church, April 30, the final date of a three-day convention.

Altoona.—Finding eighty-five assorted pint and quart bottles filled with whisky in a pocket of the back seat of an automobile, Altoona police arrested George E. Halow on the charge of violating the liquor laws. Later Amos Richardson was arrested on a similar charge and four gallons of moonshine found at his home was confiscated.

York.—An automobile truck belonging to E. F. Wilhelm, a green grocer, skidded and upset on the road near New Freedom, twenty-one miles from this place. Nine hundred, dozens, or more than 10,000 eggs, were smashed. They were scattered promiscuously along the highway. Both men riding in the machine were slightly injured.

Hazleton.—As the anthracite industry nears its usual spring dull season a peculiar condition develops, with many applicants appearing for miners' certificates. More than a score took the tests, the largest number in years. When the mines are going full blast, there are many other jobs open besides those of miners and the operators are handicapped by a scarcity of men holding certificates. But when the slump comes the miners' places are in demand.

Allentown.—A small mantel clock that suddenly stopped more than thirteen years ago on the day and almost on the minute that its owner, Jonas Brown, died and which refused to run, although members of the family had sent it to the repair shop many times, suddenly resumed its task of ticking off the seconds, minutes and hours and promises to keep good time. Members of the household say that no effort was made for many months to induce the clock to run and that it started of its own volition.

Lancaster.—The greatest problem confronting the church today is to restore American business ideals and integrity, which broke down in the aftermath of the world war, Dr. E. C. Guthrie, corresponding secretary of the Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal church, told more than 1000 Methodists in his conference Sunday sermon. Following a custom of recent years, Bishop Joseph F. Berry invited a distinguished visitor to preach the sermon.

Sharon.—Accidentally shot while several of his companions were handling a rifle near Trout Corners, Joseph Mehler, aged 15, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Mehler, of Sharon, died in Buhl Hospital. The bullet struck him in the left side and passed through both lungs. Coroner William McGrath is conducting an investigation. Mehler was a student at St. Joseph's parochial school and a member of the graduating class.

Wilkes-Barre.—A reduction of fifty cents a day in the wages of twenty-five laborers employed at the Lores No. 5 colliery of the Hudson Coal company resulted in a general walk-out at that colliery, while approximately 5000 men employed at other collieries of the same company in this section joined in a sympathy strike upon hearing of the action of the Lores employees. District President Cappein, of the United Mine Workers, announced that he will give the matter immediate attention. A meeting has been called, and the men will decide definitely whether or not the strike shall be continued.

Yardley.—Authorities are going after the Japanese beetle early this year. The Bucks county commissioners have appropriated $1500 toward the fund being raised in the state to fight the pest. Officers have been stationed at bridges to prevent transportation of merchandise that might lead to the propagation of the beetles.

Kittanning.—A good gasser has been brought in on the W. W. Barr farm, near Sellersville, by the Peoples' Gas company. The American Gas company is sinking the third well on the J. S. Coulter farm in the same locality.

POULTRY

KEEP HENS INDOORS IN SEVERE WEATHER

If you want winter eggs, the hens should not be allowed to run outdoors at all. They will do much better confined in the house all the time than they would out under the old binder or sitting in the same stall at the barn all day.

The main reason for keeping hens in the house is to force them to eat what is necessary to make them lay out of season. They must have a good, well-balanced dry mash in hoppers so they may eat at any time. This dry mash must be eaten slowly so the hens have to spend a good deal of time at the hoppers to get their fill. They must also have a grain ration and greens of some kind.

There are a number of grain rations that can be used, in fact most any grain that the hens like and is generally grown on the farm is all right. It can be balanced by the addition of other grains in the dry mash. I prefer a grain ration of cracked corn, whole oats, and wheat. Kafir is fine in the mixture and kafir and oats alone make a good grain ration, says a writer in Successful Farming.

One of the most important things in the winter care of hens is a good litter of straw or some litter material on the floor. This litter should be six or eight inches deep and all the grain must be scattered in it so the hens will have to scratch and work for their feed. The heaviest feed of grain should be given at night, so all the hens will go to roost with their crops full.

Many poultry houses are arranged so the droppings fall in the litter on the floor. This can be remedied by installing a dropping board under the roosts. The roosts can be placed across the back of the house on a level with each other and the platform for the dropping board built under them. Then the droppings can be cleaned out every day or two and the litter on the floor will not have to be changed so often.

The green feed can be supplied either by sprouting oats or by using beets or cabbage that have been stored for the purpose. The best method of feeding, I find, is to give the hens a light grain feed in the early morning. This can be scattered the night before if desired. The green feed is put out at noon and the heavy feed of grain in the evening before the hens go to roost.

Necessary to Air Eggs

During Hatching Period

All experienced incubator operators know the necessity of airing eggs, but some fail to understand why. Yet we know that the chick inside the shell is a living, growing thing and that it needs fresh air, change of conditions and exercise in order that it may expand, move and develop its strength.

Airing eggs has another merit. The shells expand and contract with heat and cold and this ripens them. By the use of machinists' callipers, one may discover an appreciable difference in expansion of eggs under 60 degrees and over 100. Frequent expansion and contraction of the shell is believed to break down fibers and make the shell brittle, so that chicks due to hatch can get out of shells with less exhaustion.

This matter of airing eggs during incubation requires judgment and should be guided by development of chicks, temperature of room, etc. If we watch sitting hens, we will find that eggs seemingly need very little airing the first week of incubation, a trifle more the second, and still more the third week when the vitality of chicks has added to the warmth of the eggs.

It is never safe to forget that chicks are dependent upon air that percolates through the porous shell. Cooling eggs shrinks the air-bubbles and sets up a suction which draws in fresh air to purify the interior stale air.

Plenty of Sunshine and

Fresh Air Aids Poultry

Always give your fowls plenty of sunshine and fresh air, the two best disease preventives for man or beast. Ventilation is an important factor in winter housing of a flock of layers, and it should be had without causing direct draughts of air upon the fowls, especially when they are on the roost at night. This can be easily accomplished by taking out one of the windows, covering the opening with burlap in cold weather and fitting it with a sliding door so it can be opened or closed at will. The air-tight or artificially-heated house with its expensive and complicated ventilating apparatus has come and gone.

Spring-Hatched Pullets

Should Be Coaxed Along

Pullets hatched in the spring can be induced to lay more abundantly in the winter if they are properly fed, housed and handled. On the average general farm very few eggs are secured at the time when eggs bring the highest prices. It will pay the poultry owner, therefore, to devote a little trouble to providing his birds with the most favorable surroundings for the winter.

Stationers Escape Prosecution, Say Federal Trade Commission

Manufacturers and vendors of stationery, to whom the Republican tariff gave a large measure of "protection" are alleged by Chairman Huston Thompson of the Federal Trade Commission to have escaped prosecution for illegal practices while Attorney General Daugherty was head of the Department of Justice. Mr. Thompson and other witnesses appearing before the Senate Committee investigating Daugherty declared that although evidence of price-fixing and other illegal methods in vogue among members of the National Association of Stationers was presented to the Department of Justice no action was taken.

Mr. Thompson testified that the National Association was constituted of three groups—manufacturers, jobbers, and retailers—and that the Trade Commission obtained evidence of a bylaw under which a committee on prices was appointed by the stationers' organization. The evidence disclosed, Mr. Thompson told the Daugherty Committee, that the combination affected the price of practically everything used in business offices from pens to filing cabinets. He declared that the complaints were finally turned back by the Department of Justice with a memorandum that there was "no case." In consequence, Mr. Thompson said, the Federal Trade Commission has since begun an independent civil action.

Morris A. Pance, a member of the firm of Sidney Morris & Company, of Chicago, alleged that when his concern attempted to sell its goods at prices below those fixed by the Stationers' Association it was denied supplies by wholesale dealers. He said that another officer of the Morris Company went to consult Fred Upham, treasurer of the Republican National Committee, to induce the latter to see Attorney General Daugherty and urge him to attack the combine in the courts.

On Upham's return from Washington, Pance testified he said: "I have talked the matter over with Harry and he told me he would not prosecute the case."

The Senate Committee was told that lead pencils which cost less than 2 cents each were priced 15 cents under direction of the alleged combination. Sponges used by school children were priced at 3 cents each when a price of 1 cent each would have yielded a fair profit, witnesses testified.

The Fordney-McCumber tariff placed a heavy tax on lead pencils, slate pencils, and crayons, and also increased the duty on practically every kind of paper and manufacture of paper. It is expected that if the stationers accused of illegal restraints of trade are convicted they will meantime have derived enough profits from the Republican tariff to cover the amount of their fine and have a big balance left.

Coolidge's Reference to World Court Irritates G. O. P. Committee

Reactions following President Coolidge's address at the Associated Press dinner in New York have not been favorable to him or helpful to Republican solidarity in Congress. His reference to the World Court, though passing and cautious, served to renew the demand for action on the part of Senator Lodge, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and to annoy officials of the Republican National Committee.

From the viewpoint of the Republican organization the President's revival of the discussion of the World Court was unwelcome. It would have been easier to gloss the subject in a plank of the Republican platform if meantime the agitation which the President has inspired had not once more brought it vividly to public attention, and located the responsibility for the Senate's inaction directly on the shoulders of Senator Lodge and his Republican associate leaders.

The bosses of the Republican National Committee have been irritated it is reported, because they have all along opposed the World Court either openly or clandestinely, and take the President's latest sponsorship and indirect promotion of it as a rebuff to themselves. With the National Republican nominally displaced as official organ of the National Committee it is expected that it will depreciate the World Court. In any event, it is predicted, the National Republican will give no aid or comfort of the President's proposal.

Interest In Democratic Convention Overshadows G. O. P. Office-Holders' Sideshow.

Washington, May 7.—With the Democratic National Convention still six weeks distant interest in the big gathering has grown to large proportions and the outlook is for the largest attendance and the greatest enthusiasm in the history of the party. Thousands of Democrats in all parts of the country are indicating their intention of going to New York to be in the city if not within Madison Square Garden when the next President of the United States is nominated.

Information coming to Democratic headquarters in Washington is that the attendance of many women as delegates to the convention will have the effect of prompting the presence of large numbers of women as visitors. Newspapers of all kinds—dailies and weeklies, metropolitan and others of relative importance—are at once gratifying and stimulating interest in the convention by publishing the news of the preparations or the big assemblage of Democrats.

Requests for accommodations for newspapers in all sections of the country are coming by hundreds to the committee in charge. It is already apparent that the number of editors, correspondents and special writers at the New York convention will exceed by a great many any previous record.

It is evident that thousands who wish to gain admission to Madison Square Garden will be disappointed. While the capacity of the Garden will be enlarged it will still be far short of meeting the demands. The representatives of the Democratic National Committee and the committees which will be host to the convention regret that no adequate provision can be made for all the thousands of men and women who will fill New York during the week of June 24-31, but it is pointed out that no hall or other building big enough to accommodate the crowds could be found in the United States.

Notwithstanding this foreknowledge that Madison Square Garden will not be big enough thousands of Democrats are determined to go to New York. They want to be there when the Democratic presidential and vice-presidential candidates are chosen and be identified with the historic occasion. The local committees are planning a series of entertainments and diversions for visitors. As the Washington correspondent of a western newspaper remarked, "The Republican convention at Cleveland won't rise to the importance of a second-class sideshow compared with the Democratic gathering in New York."

Investigations in the Middle West G. O. P. National Committee Sees Gloom in Ohio and Indiana

In a series of dispatches based on investigation in the Middle West, James T. Williams Jr., editor of the Boston Transcript, is warning President Coolidge to rid the Republican organization of its present officials and bosses. The Boston Transcript is generally credited with a good deal of influence at the White House and on several occasions has anticipated, if not inspired, action by President Coolidge.

Editor Williams reports that the outlook for the Republican party is pretty gloomy in Ohio and Indiana because of the national and local scandals for which the people are holding it responsible. He recommends that President Coolidge be made to appear better than his associates in the Republican organization. Governor McGraw's conviction in Indiana and Harry Daugherty's candidacy for delegate to the Republican national convention from Ohio were mentioned as two causes of trouble for President Coolidge.

The retirement of Chairman John T. Adams, Secretary, Lockwood and Treasurer Upham of the Republican National Committee was not only suggested but forecast by Mr. Williams as one of the moves that would have to be made in Mr. Coolidge's behalf. It was expected by the President's followers in Indiana and Ohio, Mr. Williams reported, that Mr. Coolidge would himself select the successors of these present officials of the Republican National Committee. The success of the President's campaign in Indiana, says Mr. Williams, depends on "the dispatch and thoroughness with which the nominee of the Cleveland convention reorganizes his whole party."

"To do this," writes Mr. Williams, "the Republican standard bearers must begin with the Republican National Committee, much of whose machinery ought to be scrapped and most of whose present members should retire voluntarily or be retired against their will."

Even that procedure would afford no guarantee of Republican victory in Indiana, as Mr. Williams admits. "If any Republican can carry Indiana this year, the man in the White House will, but in April that appears to be a big 'if.'"

HOUSE O' DREAMS

By DOROTHY R. SCOVILLE
(©, 1924, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

THE villagers all wondered why anyone should want to build in such a lonely place. "But, then, them artists are queer folks, anyway," was their verdict when they saw Hall Crane and observed his ways.

The cozy little bungalow that came to nestle in the pine woods at Cauldron Cove was a good half-mile from the little fishing village, and there was no one living nearby save old Mat Coles, who was deaf and a hermit and whom people rarely saw.

When the cottage was nearly finished, Rhea Lowe came to the village. She was tired of the city and its ways, and wished a quiet place to write and to rest. Shortly after she arrived the old schooner, hauled up on the edge of Cauldron Cove, by the pine grove, began to show signs of rehabilitation. A gay little sign swung from the bowsprit one day. "Ship o' Dreams" it had been christened.

A few days after the christening Hall Crane came to live in his little place. And strangely enough a gay little sign appeared there also. "House o' Dreams" had come to life.

One morning as Rhea Lowe was singing at her work a firm knock sounded at the door of the forward cabin. She admitted Hall Crane.

"Miss Lowe, I believe?" he said, with polite coolness.

"I believe you have the advantage," she suggested.

"Hall Crane. I own the bungalow up the beach," he answered. "I've come to make a business deal with you. I desire to be alone here and I do not want neighbors."

"Will you please name your price on this place?" he asked with impersonal finality.

Miss Lowe's eyes gleamed dangerously. "I do not care to sell and, furthermore, neither do I care to be troubled with neighbors. And at least you could be original with the name of your house," she retorted, with a flare of anger.

His eyes narrowed. "The name of my house was settled upon long before I observed yours," he said, and they parted with mutual dislike.

"Extraneous, trivial, selfish, unbecoming!" thought Rhea Lowe. "Just because he's gotten stuck once he's made up his mind not to be any other way. I'd like to show him!" Then she laughed.

"Extraneous, trivial, selfish, unbecoming!" thought Hall Crane. "Just because she's gotten stuck once she's made up her mind not to be any other way. I'd like to show her!" Then he laughed.

One morning Hall Crane received a note from Rhea Lowe. "You may have my 'Ship o' Dreams,'" it read. "I won't need it any longer." Suddenly he put on his coat and went out of the house toward the Ship o' Dreams. He went quickly up the gangway and knocked. No answer. He pushed open the door. The cozy little cabin was empty. A cold fear gripped him as he came up on the deck.

He instinctively looked toward the rock that hung over the cove. There, facing the sea, was a wind-blown figure. He ran up the beach and as she moved toward the edge of the rock he gave a shout of alarm.

"Don't do that!" he begged. She turned slowly toward him.

"You mustn't do a thing like that. It's wrong," he rebuked sternly. She remained silent, but her lips curled with scorn. "Well, there's no reason for being so rash, and—" Then he kissed her.

"Mr. Crane!" she gasped.

"Er—Rhea—please forgive me, Miss Lowe," he said stily.

She looked down at the sand to hide the imps of laughter in her eyes. "Yes, of course. It's really of no consequence, anyway. Nothing is," she finished in a discouraged voice.

He watched her, puzzled. "Oh, but there are worth-while things in the world still!" he hastened to assure her.

"There is love," he said in a low voice.

"Is there?" she mocked. "Well, some never find it."

"In a House o' Dreams they would."

"Perhaps."

They were at the ship now. "Good-by and thank you," she said as she went inside. He went away with a strange sense of having been cheated, of vague disappointment. He had forgotten to speak of her note. But that did not seem important to him now. Then he realized that his House o' Dreams was a failure. In spite of his making it ideal in every way and of planning to keep his enjoyment to himself, he knew there was something lacking. What a fool he had been!

On the boat Rhea was also thinking things over. She had not intended to jump off the rock at all. It was merely a place of vantage to watch the surf. But when she realized that he thought that she was about to jump, she let him believe so, in hope that it would awaken him, but the awakening had been of short duration.

He evidently was hopeless. And she really did like him. The city was such a huge, clamoring place. She didn't want to leave her Ship o' Dreams—and Hall Crane. Suddenly she felt discouraged and lonely. A tear crept down her cheek. At that moment the newly-awakened Hall Crane came in.

House o' Dreams has two tenants now and the villagers smile and say, "I told you so." While back in New York the Art club members and the Writers' circle talk of how contented and happy the two cynics seem away out there—remote from everything.

There will be a lecture in the U. B. Church here on next Saturday evening.

SPRING FLOWERS

Yellow and white and crimson, out of the spring-time sod, they are the breath of the season, blown from the mouth of God. They are the marks of His footsteps, who walks the waiting hills, for ever the brown earth quickens wherever His strong touch thrills. How they spring into being, beautiful, bright and sure, wherever He presses His fingers, the blues of God stand pure I follow Him out on the hillside, away from the haunts of men: I am a child of the Maker, who clothes the world again.

It was barren in winter, it seemed that God forgot, for only the pure, cold flowers of ice lay upon wood and knot. But He is abroad in the springtime--grows strong my feet to go wherever His grass is springing, wherever His waters flow. He takes me often with Him, He makes the world to sing, and He and I together build it every spring. For every year in glory, and never twice the same. He lights before the eyes of men His hillside after flame.

Recent visitors of Mrs. M. J. Amick were: Mr. and Mrs. M. F. Amick and two daughters of Ellerslie, Md., Misses Lottie Shaffer and Effie Petters of Bedford and Mr. Charley Clawson of Pittsburgh.

Mr. Edwin Hartley who has been ill for some time still remains in a critical condition.

Mrs. David Shunk of Intertown called on Mr. C. C. Foreman and family.

SOLACE

"If I should die and leave you here awhile,

Be not like others, sore, undone who keep

Long veils by the silent dust, and weep,

For my sake turn again to life and smile,

Nerving thy heart and rembling hand to do

Something to comfort weaker hearts than thine--

Complete these dear unfinished tasks of mine

And I, perchance, may therein comfort you"

Hughes didn't know that interstate transportation of prizefight films was illegal. We'll bet he doesn't know yet he was defeated for President. Poor ignoramus! We wonder if he is living, which is so common in Washington or telling the truth?

C. Bascom Stemp, "Assistant President," flew high as an oil gambler. He flew from peddler to plunger, that boy.

people who will be able to give me all the facts. If I was misled into making statements that were untrue in my last meeting with your sister I shall most humbly apologize to her. If on the contrary I find that what I said to her was true I will make it my business to bring all the facts to the notice of the people of Lafayette and let them know what to do in the matter. In any case I shall return in about a month or six weeks at which time I shall renew my challenge to you with the sincere hope that you may accept it and that I may have the belated pleasure of putting a bullet through your cowardly heart. I must however in the meantime refuse to sign myself

CHAPTER XXIII

The Trysting Place of Thoughts.

The turmoil and excitement over the Indian outbreak increased during the day. A constant stream of refugees, mostly old men, women and children, poured into Lafayette from regions west of the Wabash. By nightfall fully three hundred of them were being cared for by the people of the town, and more were coming.

Shortly after noon a mounted scout rode in from Warren county with the word that the militia of his county was preparing to start off at once to meet the advancing hordes; he brought in the report that farther north the frontier was being abandoned by the settlers and that massacres already had occurred. There was also a well-supported rumor that a portion of the Illinois militia, some two hundred and fifty men in all, had been routed on Hickory creek by Black Hawk's invincible warriors, with appalling losses to the whites. He bore a stirring message from his commanding officer, urging the men of Tippecanoe to rush themselves and join Warren county troops in an immediate movement to repel or at least to check the Sacs and Miamis and Potawatomies who were swarming over the prairies like locusts.

The appearance of this messenger, worn and spent after his long ride, created a profound sensation. Here at last was official verification of the stories brought in by the panic-stricken refugees; here was something that caused the whole town suddenly to awake to the fact that a real menace existed, and that it was not, after all, another of those rattle-brained "scare" which were constantly cropping up.

For months there had been talk of old Black Hawk and his Sacs going on the warpath over the occupation of their lands in northern Illinois by the swift-advancing, ruthless whites. The old Sag, or Sauk, chieftain had long threatened to resist by force of arms this violation of the treaty. He had been so long, however, in even making a start to carry out his threat that the more enlightened pioneers had ceased to take any stock in his spoutings.

The Free Press, Lafayette's only newspaper, had from time to time printed news seeping out of the Northwest by means of carrier or voyageur; their tales bore out the reports furnished by federal and state authorities on the more or less unsettled conditions.

There was, for example, the extremely disquieting story that Black Hawk, on his return from a hunting trip west of the Mississippi, had traveled far eastward across northern Indiana to seek the advice of the British commander in Canada. Not only was the story of this pilgrimage true, but the fact was afterward definitely established that the British official advised the chief to make war on the white settlers—this being late in 1831, nearly twenty years after the close of the War of 1812. Many of Black Hawk's warriors had served under Tecumseh in the last war with England, and they still were rabid British sympathizers.

Amidst the greatest enthusiasm and excitement, the men of Lafayette organized the "Guards," a company some three hundred strong. After several days of intensive and, for a time, ludicrous "drilling," they were ready and eager to ride out into the terrorized Northwest.

Kenneth Gwynne was a private in "The Guards."

During the thrilling days of preparation for the expedition, he saw little of the women next door. Doubtless for reasons of their own, Viola and her mother maintained a strange and persistent aloofness. It was not until the evening before the departure of the "Guards" that he took matters into his own hands and walked over to Rachel's house.

The few glimpses he had had of Viola during these busy days and nights served not only to increase his ardent craving for her but caused him the most acute misery as well. Utter despond had fallen upon him.

It was significant of her new attitude toward life that she had cast aside the somber habiliments of mourning. She was now appearing in bright, though not gay colors—unmistakable evidence of her decision to abandon all pretense of grief for the man she had looked upon for so many years as her father.

There was a strange, new vivacity in her manner, too—something that hurt rather than cheered him. He heard her singing about the house—gay, larksome little snatches—and she whistled merrily as she worked in the garden. Somehow her very light-heartedness added to his despair. What right had she to be happy and gay and cheerful whilst he was so miserable? Had he not told her in so many words that he loved her? Did that mean nothing to her? Why should she sing and whistle in her own domain when she must have known that he was suffering in his, not twenty rods away? He was conscious at times of a sense of injury, and as the time drew near for his departure without so much as a sign of regret or even interest on her part, this feeling deepened into resentment.

He was very stiff and formal as he approached the porch on which Viola and her mother were seated, enjoying the cool evening breeze that had sprung up at the end of the hot and sultry day.

"We are off at daybreak," he said, standing before them, his hat in his hand. "I thought I would come over to say good-by."

His hungry gaze swept over the figure of the girl, shadowy and indistinct in the semi-darkness. To his amazement, he saw that she was attired in the frock she had worn on that unforgettable night at Striker's. She leaned forward and held out her hand to him. As he took it he looked up into her dusky face and caught his breath. Good heavens! She was actually smiling! Smiling when he was going away perhaps never to return alive!

She did not speak. It was Rachel Carter who said, quietly:

"Thank you for coming over, Kenneth. We would not have allowed you to go, however, without saying good-by and wishing you well on this hazardous undertaking. May God protect you and all the brave men who go with you."

He had not released Viola's hand. Suddenly her grip tightened; her other hand was raised quickly to her face, and he was dumfounded to see that she was dabbing at her eyes with her handkerchief. His heart swelled. She had been smiling bravely all the while her eyes were filled with tears. And now he knew why she was silent. He lifted her hand to his lips.

"I want you to know, Viola dear, before I go away," he said huskily, "that I can and will give you back the name Gwynne, and with my name I give more love than ever any man had for woman before in all this world. I lay my heart at your feet. It is yours whether you choose to pick it up or not."

She slowly withdrew her hand. Neither of them heard the long, deep sigh in the darkness beside them.

"I don't know what to say to you, Kenny," she murmured, almost inaudibly.

"There is nothing for you to say, Viola, unless you love me. I am sorry if I have distressed you. I only wanted you to know before I go away that I love you."

"I—I am glad you love me, Kenny. It makes me very happy. But it is all so strange, so unreal. I can't seem to convince myself that it is right for you to love me or for me to love you. Some day, perhaps, it will all straighten itself out in my mind and then I will know whether it is love—the kind of love you want—or just a dear, sweet affection that I feel for you."

"I understand," he said gravely. "It is too soon for you to know. A brother turned into a lover, as if by magic, and you are bewildered. I can only pray that the time will come when your heart tells you that you love me as I want you to, and as I love you."

They spoke thus freely before the girl's mother, for those were the days when a man's courting was not done surreptitiously. It is doubtful, however, if they remembered her presence.

"There have been times—" she began, a trace of eagerness in her voice, "when something seemed to tell me that—that I ought to keep away from you. I used to have the queerest sensations running all over—" She did not complete the sentence; instead, as if in a sudden panic over the eagerness of unmaidenly revelations, she somewhat breathlessly began all over again: "I guess it must have been a warning, or something."

"They say there is such a thing as a lightning current between human beings," he said. "It was that, Viola. You felt my love laying hold upon you, touching you, caressing you."

"The other night, when you held me so close to you, I—I couldn't think of you as my brother."

Out of the darkness spoke Rachel Carter.

"You love each other," she said. "There is no use trying to explain or account for your feelings. The day you came here, Kenneth Gwynne, I saw the handwriting on the wall. I knew that this would happen. It was as certain as the rising of the sun. It would have been as useless for me to attempt to stop the rising sun as to try to keep you two from falling in love with each other. It was so written long ago."

"But, mother, I am not sure—how can you say that I am in love with her? I—I don't know it myself?" cried Viola.

"You came, Kenneth, I knew that my days were numbered," went on the older woman, leaning forward in her chair. "The truth would have to come out. A force I could not stand up against had entered the field. For want of a better word we will call it Fate. It is useless to fight Fate. If I had never told you two the truth about yourselves, you would have found it out anyway. You would have found it out in the touch of your hands, in the leap of the blood, in the strange, mysterious desire of the flesh over which the soul has no control. You began loving him, Viola—without knowing it—that night at Phineas Striker's. You—"

"How can you say such a thing, mother?" cried Viola hotly. "I was in love with Barry Lapelle at that—"

"You were never in love with Barry," broke in her mother calmly.

"I think I ought to know when I am in love and when I am not. I am going in the house. It is not for you or anybody else to say I am in love with Kenny. Good night, Kenny."

"I came to say good-by," he reminded her.

She paused with her hand on the latch. He heard the little catch in her breath. Then she turned impulsively and came back to him. "I will miss you, Kenny—I will miss you terribly. Good-by, Kenneth Gwynne."

"Good-by, Minda Carter," he said softly, and again raised her hand to his lips. "My little Minda grown up to be the most beautiful queen in all the world."

She turned and fled swiftly into the house. They heard her go racing up the stairs—then a door open and slam shut again.

"She would be very happy tonight, Kenneth, if it were not for one thing," said Rachel. "I still stand in the way. She cannot give herself to you except at a cost to me. There can be nothing between you until I stand before the world and say there is no reason why you should not be married to each other. Do you wonder that she does not know her own heart?"

"And I would not deserve her love and trust if I were to ask you to pay that price, Rachel Carter," said he steadily.

"Good-by, Kenneth," she said, after a moment. She held out her hand. "Will you take my hand—just this once, boy?"

He did not hesitate. He grasped the hard, toil-worn hand firmly in his. "We can never be friends, Rachel Carter—but, as God is my witness, I am no longer your enemy," he said, with feeling. "Good-by."

He was half-way down to the gate when she called to him:

"Wait, Kenneth. Moll has something for you."

He turned back and met Moll Hawk as she came swiftly toward him.

"Here's somethin' fer you to carry in your pocket, Mr. Gwynne," said the girl in her hoarse, low-pitched voice. "No harm c'n ever come to you as long as you got this with you—in your pocket or anywhere. Hit's a charm an' old Injun chief give my pap when he wuz with the tribe, long before I wuz born. Pap lost it the day before he wuz taken up by the sheriff, er else he never would ha' had setch bad luck. I found it day before yesterday when I wuz down to the cabin, seein' about movin' our hogs an' chickens an' hosses over to Miss Gwynn's barn. The only reason the Injun give it to pap wuz beca' he wuz over a hundred years old an' didn't want to warn off death no longer. Hit's just a little round stone with somethin' fer all the world like eyes an' nose an' mouth on one side of it—jest as if hit had been carved out, only hit wuzn't. Hit's jest natural. Hit keeps off sickness an' death an' bad luck, Mr. Gwynne. Pap knowed he wuz goin' to ketch the devil the minute he found out he lost it. I tol' Miss Violy I wanted fer you to have it with you while you wuz off fightin' the Injuns, an' she said she'd love me to her dyin' day if I would give you the loan of it. Mebbe you don't believe in charms an' signs an' all setch stuff, but hit can't hurt you to carry it an'—an' hit's best to be on the safe side. Please keep it, Mr. Gwynne."

It was a round object no bigger than a hickory nut. He had taken it from her hand and was running his thumb over its surface while she was speaking. He could feel the tiny nose and the little indentations that produced the effect of eyes.

"Thank you, Moll," he said, sincerely touched. "It's mighty good of you. I will bring it back to you, never fear, and I hope that after it has served me faithfully for a little while it may do the same for you (jill you, too, have seen a hundred and don't want to live any longer. What was it Miss Violy said to you?"

"I guess I hadn't ought to said that?"

she humbled. "Anyhow, I ain't goin' to say it over again. Good-by, Mr. Gwynne—and take good keer of yourself."

With that she hurried back to the house, and he, after a glance up at the second-story window which he knew to be Viola's, bent his steps homeward.

His saddlebags were already packed, his pistols cleaned and oiled; the long-barreled rifle he had borrowed from the tavern keeper was in prime order for the expedition. Zachariah had gotten out his oldest clothes, his thick riding boots, a linsy shirt and the rough but serviceable buckskin cap that old Mr. Price had hobbled over to the office to give him after the first day of drill with the sententious remark that a "plug hat was a perfy thing to parade around in but it wasn't a very handy sort of a hat to be buried in."

Kenneth's lamp burned far into the night. Not once but many times he took up from the table a short, legal-looking document and re-read its contents, which were entirely in his own cramped, scholastic hand save for the names of two witnesses at the end. It was his last will and testament, drawn up that very day. Minda Carter was named therein as his sole legatee—"Minda Carter, at present known as Viola Gwynn, the daughter of Owen and Rachel Carter." His father had, to all intents and purposes, cut her off without a penny, an injustice which would be righted in case of his own death.

It was near midnight when he blew out the light and threw himself fully dressed upon the bed. Sleep would not come. At last, in desperation, he got up and stole guiltily, self-consciously into the yard. Presently he was standing at the fence separating the two yards, his elbows on the top rail, his gloomy, love-lorn gaze was steadfastly fixed upon Viola's darkened window.

He did not know how long he had been standing there when his ear caught the sound of a gently-closing door. A moment later a dim, shadowy figure appeared at the corner of the house, stood motionless for a few seconds and then came directly toward him. He rubbed his eyes.

"Viola!" he whispered.

"Oh, Kenny," she faltered, and her voice was low and soft like the sighing of the wind. "I—I am so ashamed. What will you think of me for coming out here like this?"

The god of Love gave him wings. He was over the fence, she was in his arms, and he was straining the warm, pliant body close to his bursting breast. His lips were on hers. He felt her stiffen and then relax in swift surrender. Her heart, stilled at first, began to beat tumultuously against his breast; her free arm stole about his neck and tightened as the urge of a sweet, overwhelming passion swept over her.

"What Will You Think of Me for Coming Out Here Like This?"

At last she released herself from his embrace and stood with bowed head, her hands pressed to her eyes.

"I didn't mean to do it—I didn't mean to do this," she was murmuring. "You love me—you love me," he whispered, his voice trembling with joy. He drew her hands down from her eyes and held them tight in his own. "Say you do, Viola—speak the words."

"It must be love," she sighed. "What else could make me feel as I do now—as I did when you were holding me, and kissing me? Oh—oh—yes, I do love you, Kenny. I know it now. I love you with all my soul."

She was in his arms again. "But," she panted a little later, "I swear I didn't know it when I came out here. Kenny—I swear I didn't."

"Oh, yes, you did," he cried triumphantly. "You've known it all the time, only you didn't understand."

"I wonder," she mused. Then quickly, shyly: "I had no idea it could come like this—that it would be like this. I feel so queer. My knees are all trembly—it's the strangest feeling. Now you must let me go, Kenny. I must not stay out here with you. It's terribly late. I—"

"I can't let you go yet, dearest. Come! We will sit for a little while on the steps. Don't leave me yet, Viola. It is all so wonderful, so unbelievable. And to think I was looking up at your window only a few minutes ago, wishing that you would fly down to me. Good heavens! It can't be a dream, can it? All this is real, isn't it?"

She laughed softly. "It can't be a dream with me, because I haven't even been in bed. I've been sitting up there in my window for hours, looking over at your house. When your light went out, I was terribly lonely. Yes, and I was a little put out with you for going to bed. Then I saw you come and lean on the fence. I knew you were looking up at my window—and I was sure that you could see me in spite of the darkness. You never moved—just stood there with your elbows on the fence, staring up at me. It made me very uncomfortable, because I was in my nightgown. So I made up my mind to get into bed and pull the coverlet up over my head. But I didn't do it. I put on my dress—everything—shoes and stockings and all—and then I went back to see if you were still there. There you were. You hadn't moved. So I sat down again and watched you. After awhile I—I—well, I just couldn't help creeping downstairs and coming out to—to say good-by to you again, Kenny. You looked so lonesome."

"I was lonesome," he said—"terribly lonesome."

She led him to a crudely constructed bench at the foot of a towering elm whose lower branches swept the fore-corner of the roof.

"Let us sit here, Kenny dear," she said. "It is where I shall come and sit every night while you are gone away. It will be the trysting place for our thoughts."

"That's wonderful, Viola," he said, impressed. "The trysting place for our thoughts." Aye, and that it shall be. Every night, no matter where my body may go or what peril it may be in, I shall be here beside you in my thoughts."

She rested against him, in the crook of his strong right arm, her head against his shoulder, and they both fell silent and pensive under the spell of a wondrous enchantment.

After a while, she spoke, and there was a note of despair in her voice:

"What is to become of us, Kenny? What are we to do?"

"No power on earth can take you away from me now, Minda," he said.

"Ah—that's it," she said miserably. "You call me Minda—and still you wonder why I ask what we are to do."

"You mean—about—"

"We can be nothing more to each other than we are now. There is someone else we must think of. I—I forgot her for a little while, Kenny—I was so happy that I forgot her."

"Were ever two souls so tried as ours," he groaned, and again silence fell between them.

Kneeling at the window from which Viola had peered so short a time before, looking down upon the figures under the tree, was Rachel Carter. She could hear their low voices, and her ears, made sharp by pain, caught the rapturous and the forlorn passages breathed upon the still air.

She arose stiffly and drew back into the darkness, out of the dim, starlit path, and standing there with her head high, her arms outspread, she made her solemn vow of self-renunciation.

"I have no right to stand between them and happiness. They have done no wrong. They do not deserve to be punished. My mind is made up. Tomorrow I shall speak. God has brought them together. It is not for me to keep them apart. Aye, tomorrow I shall speak."

Then Rachel Carter, at peace with herself, went back to her bed across the hall and was soon asleep, a smile upon her lips, the creases wiped from between her eyes as if by some magic soothing hand.

CHAPTER XXIV

The Ending.

At crack-o'-day Kenneth rode out of his stableyard on Brandy Boy, and went cantering away, followed on foot by the excited Zachariah, bound for the parade ground where the "soldiers" were to concentrate.

The rider turned in his saddle to wave farewell to the little group huddled at Rachel's gate—three tall women who waved back to him. Rounding the bend, he sent a swift glance over his shoulder. There was but one figure at the gate now; she blew a kiss to him.

Nearly three hundred horsemen moved out of Lafayette that forenoon amidst the greatest excitement and enthusiasm. Most of them swam their horses across the river, too eager to wait for the small-boat ferry to transport them to the opposite bank. They were fearfully and wonderfully armed and equipped for the expedition. Guns of all descriptions and ages; pistols, axes, knives and diligently scoured swords; pots and pans and kettles; blankets, knapsacks and parcels of varying sizes; in all a strange and motley assortment that would have caused a troop of regulars to die of laughter. But the valiant spirit was there. Even the provident and far-sighted gentlemen who strapped cumbersome and in some cases voluptuous umbrellas (because of their extraneous contents) across their backs alongside the guns, were no more timorous than their swashbuckling neighbors who scorned the tempest even as they scorned the bloodthirsty redskins. Four heavily laden wagons brought up the rear.

Kenneth Gwynne rode beside the ubiquitous "Judge" Billings, who cheerfully and persuasively sought to "swap" horses with him when not otherwise employed in discoursing upon the vast inefficiency of certain specifically named officers who rode in the head of the column. He was particularly

LIVE STOCK NEWS

Sheep Are Particularly

Subject to Parasites

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Sheep probably suffer more from parasites than do any other kind of live stock, says the United States Department of Agriculture in a publication just issued entitled "Farmers' Bulletin 1330, Parasites and Parasitic Diseases of Sheep," by Maurice C. Hall of the bureau of animal industry. Most of our losses in sheep, mutton, and wool are from animal parasites, as sheep suffer comparatively little from bacterial diseases, it is said. Lambs and young animals are most susceptible to parasites and suffer from them.

Special emphasis is placed in the bulletin upon disease prevention. It is the sheepman's business to prevent disease, and as soon as an outbreak is noticed a competent veterinarian should be called in. Act promptly, the department urges, to ascertain the trouble when sheep become unthrifty. A postmortem examination of one of the sick animals may disclose the trouble and save others. Parasitized animals usually do not have fever—they are unthrifty, and unthriftness may go on to emaciation with a fatal termination.

Pasture rotation, use of forage crops, feeding from racks or bare floors, draining or filling swamps, and restraint of wandering dogs are measures the department recommends as being of value in parasite control. It points out emphatically that permanent pastures perpetuate parasites. Parasite eggs pass in the manure, usually. The disposal of the manure determines the fate of these eggs, whether they find their way back into the animals and hatch out or not.

Copies of the bulletin may be had without cost, as long as the supply lasts, by writing to the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Better Lambs Campaign

Is Winner in Kentucky

Kentucky is leading the eastern sheep-producing states in a campaign to eliminate the "bucky" lamb, according to reports to the bureau of agricultural economics of the Department of Agriculture. This is the third season that the campaign has been carried on by the state extension agents and, as a result, it is estimated that more than 200,000 docked wether and ewe lambs will be marketed from Kentucky this year. The high quality of these lambs already has attracted the attention of many eastern buyers, who are going into the state and buying direct from the producers instead of waiting for the lambs to arrive at the central markets. A number of public auctions have been held, with the highest bid frequently within 50 cents per 100 pounds of the top at the leading eastern markets the same day.

Losses from docking and castration have been very small. The greatest advantage from eliminating the "bucky" lamb, according to members of the trade and marketing specialists, is in reducing the number of seconds and culls in the market receipts. It is estimated that from one-third to one-half more lambs can be handled in the future than are now sold, because of the improvement in the supply.

Then Rachel Carter, at peace with herself, went back to her bed across the hall and was soon asleep, a smile upon her lips, the creases wiped from between her eyes as if by some magic soothing hand.

Potatoes Particularly

Valuable for Fattening

"Potatoes are particularly valuable for fattening pigs," says Austin A. Dowell, live-stock extension specialist with the University of Minnesota. "They should be cooked, the water discarded, then mixed with grain at the rate of three parts potatoes to one part of the concentrates. Prepared in this way they may be fed liberally to fatten pigs or sows with litters. Raw potatoes may be fed in limited quantities to mature and idle brood sows. If fed to pregnant sows, they should be cooked and fed in relatively small quantities."

Mr. Dowell says that raw potatoes are often readily eaten by cattle, horses and sheep. Fed in large quantities to dairy cattle they are likely to taint the milk and produce a white, saline-like butter. Another reason why potatoes should not be fed too freely, says Mr. Dowell, is because they contain a poisonous material called solanine. The sprouts carry this substance in relatively large quantities and should be removed before feeding.

Lambing Time Is Looked

Upon as One of Troubles

Lambing time is looked upon by many flock owners as one of difficulty. It is a very important season for the shepherd and the degree of success through the lambing season largely determines the profit or loss from a flock. Cared for properly after they are bred, very little trouble will be experienced at lambing time.

Fall Pig Ration Giving

Most Lucrative Results

One ration which has given good results in the fall pig feeding is composed of 50 pounds of corn, 30 pounds of middlings and 10 pounds of tankage. Another used successfully is made up of 10 parts of corn and 1 of tankage. Fifty pounds of corn, 50 pounds of shipstuff and 10 pounds of tankage also makes a good ration, while 8 parts of corn and 1 part of soy beans may be used for a fourth.

DEATH OF MURPHY BLOW TO SMITH

DEMOCRATIC LEADERS DO NOT NOW THINK GOVERNOR CAN WIN THE NOMINATION.

By EDWARD B. CLARK

Washington.—Interest, already high pitched, in the coming Democratic national convention has been increased in zest by the death of the leader of Tammany hall, Charles F. Murphy. It may seem curious, but political observers here generally seem to believe that the death of one person removed as an individual from any suggestion of national ambitions for himself, should be able to shadow the chances of preferment of another individual, who did have some ambitions, namely, Alfred E. Smith, governor of New York state.

It may be that with another man who has been drafted to succeed in the leadership of the supporters of the New York candidate, he will be able to command at the outset the delegate votes with which he has been accredited, but seemingly now the democracy as represented in its leadership in Washington has given over thought that Alfred E. Smith will be a formidable candidate for the nomination. There has been a good deal of gossip in Washington recently concerning a ticket which finally may win out in the great Democratic gathering—Samuel M. Ralston for president, and Alfred E. Smith for vice president.

A ticket of this kind, according to the thoughts of the politicians, would be a wise one in a number of senses. It would give the country a chance to vote for a middle western man and for an eastern man, thus balancing the ticket geographically, and it would placate in considerable measure the "drys" of the party and the "wets" with them.

Smith's Religion Counts.

It is not a grateful thing to discuss religious matters in connection with American politics, but the question of the religion of candidates has entered largely if somewhat quietly into the question of preference for high nomination place. One of the known objections entered, particularly in the South and in parts of the West, to the nomination of Alfred E. Smith, is the fact that he is a member of the Roman Catholic church. Some of the politicians seem to think that the nomination of Governor Smith for the vice presidency with a middle western Protestant at the head of the ticket, would shadow the religious issue, if it be a real issue, in the matter.

Some of the Democrats do not believe that Governor Smith would accept the second place on the ticket. A number of prominent men who have been suggested for second place on one or the other of the two great party tickets have entered objection to consideration in this connection. However, there is not in evidence as much reluctance to accept second place as once there was.

Senator Robert M. La Follette seemingly has recovered his health, and with the rejuvenation of this senator talk has been rejuvenated of a third party. Republicans are perhaps more fearful than the Democrats of such an organization. Until, however, when it seemingly was likely a day or two ago that Alfred E. Smith of New York would have no great chance to become the Democratic nominee, there was rather sharp fear in the breasts of some Democratic leaders that if the New York governor were nominated, southern Democrats might hold a convention and name another man as a candidate, thus putting still another party into the field.

The Democrats from the South and from some parts of the Middle West, apparently are strongly moved by the religious issue.

Adams and Hull Friendly.

In Washington one gets almost daily a sharpened appreciation of the fact that political differences do not necessarily make for personal differences. John T. Adams, chairman of the Republican national committee, and Cordell Hull, chairman of the Democratic national committee, have written or inspired for publication things which would make it seem that these two master politicians never would speak as they pass by. However, an evening or two ago at a great dinner in Washington they sat side by side, and so far as anyone might know from appearances and from general geniality of conversation, the two might be Damon and Pythias, or something of like kind which any other simile broomide may suggest.

Cordell Hull is a possible nominee of the Democratic party for the presidency. It is generally understood that unless the lightning strikes him with its pleasant bolt of preferment he will continue through the next campaign as the chairman of the committee of which he is now the head. So far as John T. Adams is concerned, it is rather hard to tell just now whether or not he will be found at the helm of the ship while it is plowing the troubled seas of the election campaign. This matter probably eventually will be settled by President Coolidge, who now has enough votes pledged to him to assure his nomination in the Republican convention on the first ballot.

Asks More Pay for Congressmen.

Representative Celler of the Texas district of Brooklyn, N. Y., had courage or the nerve, whichever you would have it, to introduce into congress increasing the of members of the house and senate from $7,500 to $10,000 a year.

The Brooklyn representative has declared that a congressman cannot live on his present salary and meet all the expenditures which his position imposes. He unquestionably is right so far as a good many members of congress are concerned, but there are others, the majority of house members, possibly, who not only do live on $7,500 a year, and live fairly comfortably, but manage to save money out of the sum which Uncle Sam pays them in monthly installments.

President Coolidge said after taking office that he wished to pledge his administration in advance to strict economy in government expenditures. If the bill which Representative Celler has introduced should pass both houses and go to the President, the wonder naturally is what he would do with it. If there were a strong voting expression shown in the passage of the bill a veto would injure the feelings of members of congress, and inasmuch as they are human, it might make some of them resentful.

Some Spend Much, Others Little.

Some members feel that they have a social dignity of office to maintain, and in order to maintain it a certain scale of living is necessary. There are other congressmen who have few social demands made upon them who live in lodgings and save the dollars and the nickels wherever possible, and who go home with money in hand. The demands made upon the members by their constituents are unequally distributed.

Some representatives and senators are compelled to do a lot of entertaining or otherwise would be put down as tightwads and as neglectful of the amenities of life. Others who come from more remote districts rarely have visitors from home, and moreover, perhaps, not caring much for the social life manage to get along without so much as looking into scenes of enticing social activities.

There are many members of congress who if they should prefer private life could earn sums vastly greater than the amount which the government pays them. These men, however, seemingly, are willing to take the smaller pay for the distinction of serving their constituents in congress. So it is that some men make a sacrifice by accepting the office, while other men make cash. It all depends on the man and on the demands which are made upon him.

Congress is always timid about passing any bill which is intended to benefit its members in a pecuniary way. Whenever anything of this kind is to be done attempts are made to learn in advance if it can be accomplished by a strictly nonpartisan vote. If every man in both houses should vote for a pay increase the criticism of individuals would be lessened.

Sherman's Mileage Bill.

Years ago when the late James S. Sherman, vice president of the United States during the Taft administration, was a member of the house of representatives, the first session of one congress, a special session, ran from March until the hour on December 4 when the first regular session of that congress was to begin. If there had been an adjournment of the first session some time previously most of the members would have gone home and would have drawn mileage for the travel. As it was, with one session merging into another, homeward travel and travel backward to the capital was not necessary. However, scores of members of the house thought they were entitled to draw mileage even though they didn't travel, and so they looked about for somebody with courage enough to put in a mileage bill.

Sherman was known as one of the best natured men who ever lived. He agreed to put in the bill. He did put it in and it was passed by the house fairly quickly. Then there came a blast from the country. "What did the members mean by taking mileage at twenty cents a mile for travel that was never entered upon?"

Every senator of the United States was peppered with telegrams and letters from all over the country telling him that he must vote against the mileage grab, as it was so called. It is perhaps unnecessary to say the bill never went through the upper house.

One of the arguments advanced by Representative Celler of Brooklyn in behalf of his bill is that unless representatives and senators are paid more money they cannot afford to live in Washington and meet the requirements of their positions, and this will mean that only rich men in the future can afford to serve their constituents in the capital of the United States. The Brooklyn representative seems to see the day when the house will become what years ago the senate was called, "A Millionaire's Club."

Leisurely Cooking

It seemed to the commuter, impatiently awaiting his breakfast, that the eggs were taking ages to come to a boil. He stepped softly to the kitchen door and took a peep. Apparently lost in thought, the new culinary artist was gazing at an advertising calendar which adorned the kitchen wall.

"Gee whiz," murmured the suburbanite to himself as he stole back, "this here cook lady cooks by the calendar."

Springs on New Churn

A new churn that requires little effort to operate, is suspended between springs that repeat many times motions imparted to it.

How Baby Elephants Drink

The young elephant sucks with its mouth, and with its trunk, as was formerly supposed.

JEHOIADA'S VICTORY OVER BAAL

LESSON TEXT—II Kings 11:1-18.
GOLDEN TEXT—"Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might."
—Eph. 6:10.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Kind Woman Saves a Baby King.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Story of a Boy King.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—God's Hand in Human Affairs.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Jehoiada Meant to Judah.

Joash, viewed in the light of his ancestors, was a poor prospect for a king. His grandmother was the wicked Athaliah and his great-grandparents were Ahab and Jezebel. There was enough bad blood in his veins to assure his doom. Despite this fact, he brought about some noble reforms and turned the people back to God.

1. Athaliah Usurps the Throne, (vv. 1-3).

1. Her Attempt to Destroy the Seed Royal (v. 1). In order to remove any rightful claimant to the throne she tried to kill all the royal male children. The act was not of sudden impulse, but of deliberate purpose.

2. Joash Preserved by Jehoshabea (vv. 2, 3). Though Athaliah was keen eyed, she was checkmated by another woman. This woman, the wife of the priest, stole away this child and hid him away in a bedchamber for six years. God had promised that through the Davidic line the Messiah should come. In order that this line be unbroken Joash must be preserved. No purpose of God can fail.

11. Joash Crowned King (vv. 4-12).

1. Jehoiada's Preparations (vv. 4-11). The high priest and his wife were strong characters. As the high priest, Jehoiada felt that it was his duty to thwart the heathen project of Athaliah. His wife's co-operation made possible the saving of Joash.

(1) Seeks the aid of the military leaders (v. 4). He knew somehow that these men were not loyal to Athaliah.

(2) He took an oath of them in the house of the Lord (v. 4). He bound them to their agreement by every available means.

(3) He incited their spirit of patriotism (v. 4). He gave them a sight of the king's son. This, no doubt, was a great surprise. Now, having seen the heir to the throne, they would risk everything, even their lives, in order to set him on the throne.

(4) He co-ordinates all matters (vv. 5-11). The soldiers were divided into companies and arms were distributed to them. Each group was assigned to specific duties.

2. The Coronation (v. 12).

(1) The King's son brought forth. This was a great day in Jerusalem.

(2) Put the crown upon him. This was the formal induction into office.

(3) Gave him the testimony. This was a copy of the law indicating that the king was to rule according to the law of God. The act of putting the law on his head showed that the king himself would be under control of the law.

(4) Made him king. This shows that he had been made king by the choice of the people.

(5) Anointed him. They poured oil upon his head. This was the usual method of consecrating prophets, priests and kings.

(6) Clapped their hands. This was a token of joy. The deed being done, they were ready to publicly proclaim it. They shouted "Long live the king."

III. Athaliah Slain (vv. 13-17).

1. The Noise of the Coronation of Joash Brought Athaliah to the Temple (v. 15). Up to this time she thought her place on the throne was secure and that her heathen religion had free course.

2. Her Doom (v. 14). Upon her arrival at the temple she saw the king wearing the crown and surrounded by guards so that she could do nothing. In her despair she exclaimed "Treason, treason." This was not treason, but the triumph of right over wrong—the defeat of conspiracy and plotting.

3. Athaliah Executed (vv. 15, 16). The orders were that she should not be killed in the temple. They led her out by the way of the horses' entrance to the king's palace and slew her. What a tragic end for the sinner. Sin can only prosper for a time.

IV. Worship of the People (vv. 17, 18).

Joash was seven years old when he was made king. The high priest made a covenant between the Lord, the king and the people that they would be the Lord's people. In carrying out this covenant they broke down the temple of Baal and slew the priests of Baal.

When Success Fails

There is no failure more heart-breaking and disastrous than success which leaves God out of the bargain. If you are simply setting out in life to amass mere material success, fame created or position gained, then success will be the most dismal and disastrous failure.—G. Campbell Morgan.

The Extent of Usefulness

Our duty is to be useful, not according to our desires, but to our powers.—Evangelical Visitor.
